For Friday . . .

- Find and print the syllabus on the courses website. (courses.marlboro.edu) I will have the calendar updated by the weekend.
- Be sure you are enrolled in a linked course.
- Bring the syllabus and the writing below with you to class on Friday.

First Assignment -- due Friday, January 23

I'd like to begin the class by getting a sense of how you write now -- what process you go through as you write, and what the experience of writing is like for you. So, for the first day of class, I'd like you to write a brief piece that extends a metaphor, a piece that completes this sentence:

"For me, writing is like. . . ."

So choose a metaphor that you think is most appropriate to your own experience of writing -- then, take two pages or so (yes, typed) to explore that metaphor, to explain why and how writing is the way it is for you.

We'll use these as the basis for our discussion on Friday, so bring them with you. They will not be formally graded, but I will read them with interest.
